Jeff Hernke, Engineering Tech Supervisor, presented this item. City Attorney Brian Running and Melissa Lipska, Parks & Forestry Operations Manager were also present. Ald. Pieper asked if there was some liability along the way. Brian Running spoke to the matter as he was requested to look at if there was some other recourse. He analyzed whether there was insurance to cover this or should some other party be responsible. It seems that it is not the architect's fault. It is up to the contractor to provide a correct bid. There was some serious under estimation to adapt this roofing material to the shelter. The architect's vision was too expensive. It was noted that if the City executes

the change order, it will waive the right to hold someone responsible. The contractor made it clear they cannot complete the project for the price bid and would be forced into bankruptcy. The contractor has a performance bond and perhaps the City could make the claim on the bond. The problem with the bond is that it is issued by the insurance company and would be challenged. An alternative is the City executes the change order and takes on the cost to complete the project. Another alternative is to pay the contractor for what they've done so far. For this alternative, the project would sit and deteriorate over winter while the project is rebid and the new bid would include the actual cost to install the selected roofing. Liability insurance does not cover this situation. There would probably not be a rapid resolution and it may end up in litigation. Ald. Pieper questioned where the money is going to come from. Mr. Hernke noted that the Parks & Recreation's 2021 Buchner project came under budget and can cover the change order.
